In Máriaremete, within the garden suburbs of the Buda hills, a 1404 m² plot offers space to imagine your next home. Trees and shrubs accompany the grassy ground, with neighbouring houses and hills in the distance. The more open outlook and green surroundings together create the atmosphere of the place.

Approximately 37 metres wide and largely level, the plot provides a generous starting point for considering how the garden might be used. A quiet seating area, outdoor life around a family table or space devoted to planting can matter from the earliest design stages. Any future building and specific plans must be developed in accordance with current regulations.

There is no completed house's taste to inherit here: the new owner's ideas can take centre stage. Understanding the orientation, views and existing planting helps a future home connect to this particular setting, with a garden that complements rather than simply surrounds it.

Schools in Máriaremete and Pesthidegkút, the French School and further educational options make the location appealing to families. Towards Hűvösvölgy, the city connects to this green residential setting, where the foundations of a more personal, garden-centred way of life can be established.
