This Adyliget house brings together several moods: stone garden paths, curved glazing and a classic living room are complemented by a contemporary kitchen and bright attic rooms. The result is personal and layered, a home whose different settings for family life each have their own character.

The living room, kitchen and dining area form the centre of time together. Rooms higher up offer a calmer setting for rest and work, while the attic provides further separate spaces. An internal lift connects the levels, making movement through the house more convenient. The bathrooms include a twin-basin arrangement.

Terraces and the landscaped 572 m² garden extend indoor life outside. Summer afternoons can find a different rhythm around the pool, while different parts of the garden offer places for conversation and quiet relaxation. Planting, paving and the house's forms together shape this outdoor atmosphere.

The garage and heating arrangements support everyday use, with underfloor heating adding comfort in the dining room. In Adyliget's residential setting, this house offers varied spaces that can be made personal, together with a garden and a private setting for summer relaxation.
